

Meet the Founder

Shilpi Shikha

Founder, Centre for Integrative Wellness (CFIW)

Shilpi Shikha is an entrepreneur and wellness professional with a background in interior design, management and Yogic Science. After nearly 14 years in the corporate world, including with Livspace, Walmart Global Tech and WeWork, recurring health concerns led her to explore Yoga first personally, and later through deeper professional and therapeutic study.

She studied Classical Hatha Yoga and Vedanta philosophy in a traditional Gurukula Ashram in Kerala, within the lineage of Swami Sivananda Maharaj and Swami Vishnudevananda, and later pursued Yoga Wellness and Yoga Therapy at the Morarji Desai National Institute of Yoga (MDNIY), New Delhi, under the Ministry of AYUSH, a WHO Collaborating Centre in Traditional Medicine (Yoga).

Her learning also extended to National Institute of TB and Respiratory Diseases (NITRD), New Delhi, where she gained practical exposure to pulmonary rehabilitation. She has participated in the National Level Yogasana Championship.

How CFIW Began

The idea for CFIW did not come from Yoga alone. CFIW grew from Shilpi's own experience of health at work. Recurring health concerns first brought Yoga into her life, but deeper study changed the way she understood well-being, not simply as exercise or a response to illness, but as something shaped every day by how we move, breathe, think, recover and live.

It also led to a simple question:

Why wait for health to suffer before we begin taking care of it?

Over time, her work reinforced another belief: the same concern does not mean the same need for every person. Our bodies, lifestyles and circumstances are different.

That thinking became CFIW, bringing together traditional Yogic knowledge and contemporary, evidence-informed approaches to health, with one principle at its heart:

Understand the Person Before the Practice.

Today, this principle guides CFIW across personal wellness, therapeutic wellness, education and institutional collaboration, with a larger purpose: to make well-being more preventive, personalised and part of everyday life.

Creating Health. Living Better.
